

'This highly informative yet eminently accessible set of studies of Islam in Burma/Myanmar is surely most welcome by specialists and general audiences alike at multiple levels.'

—ABDULLAH AHMED AN-NA'IM
Emory University School of Law

'A first glimpse of Muslims in Myanmar, this book sets the stage for what will hopefully become a new field of research on Islam in Southeast Asia. Bringing together a wide range of voices, Crouch provides a window from which we can peer into the precarious lives of people who have until recently been unknown to the global, reading public.'

—ANVER M. EMON
Faculty of Law, University of Toronto

'Melissa Crouch and the other authors in this volume have done a great service—intellectually and politically—by assembling this excellent collection of essays.'

—JOHN SIDEL
London School of Economics and Political Science

'Although Islam and Muslim identities and practices in Myanmar have gained wider currency in global media in recent years due to the increased persecution of and violence against Muslims in the country since 2012, there is still very little scholarship on the subject. This volume goes a long way towards rectifying that gap ...'
